New Hampshire International Speedway Information

New Hampshire International Speedway is located in Loudon, New Hampshire, and has been hosting races since opening its doors in June of 1990. Although this raceway is not usually thought of among the best in the sport, it does have a lot to offer. This is why it hosts many NASCAR and other races on a regular basis. For being in a small state, the New Hampshire International Speedway sure does get the job done in more ways than one.

There are many events that take place at New Hampshire International Speedway on a yearly basis. They include the NASCAR Nextel Cup Sylvania 300 and Lenox Industrial Tools 300; the NASCAR Craftsman Truck Series Sylvania 200; and the NASCAR Busch Series New England 200. Although these are the four most popular races to take place at New Hampshire International Speedway each year, it hosts many other smaller events as well. This makes it the perfect venue for people of all types to watch a great race.

NASCAR Sprint Cup Series: Lenox Industrial Tools 300 New Hampshire Intl Speedway

For drivers, New Hampshire International Speedway consists of a 1.058 mile long oval track. It is a challenging yet fun design that most drivers love to tackle.

On the other side of things, this venue also has a lot to offer fans. The New Hampshire International Speedway has a seating capacity of nearly 91,000. While this is not the biggest speedway in the United States, it offers plenty to fans in the way of a great experience. In fact, for venues of this size many people feel that New Hampshire International Speedway is the best of the best.

As a racing fan, you owe it to yourself to see a race at New Hampshire International Speedway sooner rather than later. The drivers have fun racing around the track at high speeds, and you will be sure to duplicate the excitement from the stands.
